

Video: Fracking may violate Safe Drinking Water Act, report says

A controversial process of extracting natural gas may violate the Safe Drinking Water Act, a new congressional report charges. We revisit the story.

Latest Videos

Reaching enlightenment in the modern Middle Ages

Parag Khanna has raced 8,000 miles from London to Mongolia, advised Barack Obama and been dubbed an adventurer-scholar. His new book posits that we're living in a modern

ProPublica's Abraham Lustgarten on fracking

ProPublica's Abraham Lustgarten discusses a congressional report on potential violations of the Safe Drinking Water Act, following up on a previous Need to Know

Fracking vs. drinking water?

A controversial process of extracting natural gas may violate the Safe Drinking Water Act, a new congressional report charges. We revisit the story.

For Egypt, what's next?

Alison Stewart talks to Michael Wahid Hanna of the Century Foundation to discuss what happens next in Egypt, and how that will affect the rest of the Arab world.

Reflections on an uprising

Need to Know producer Mona Iskander, an Egyptian-American, shares her personal observations of the political upheaval in Egypt.

Welcome to the multiverse!

Theoretical physicist and New York Times best-selling author Brian Greene explains, among other things, how the universe is like a muffin, and why there's actually not one universe at all.

Revolution on the streets, but not in print

Editor Mona Anis was working for an Egyptian government mouthpiece newspaper by day and protesting the government by night.

The sights and sounds of Egypt's uprising

Ron Haviv, award-winning photojournalist from VII, narrates images of Cairo during this revolutionary week.

Getting kids out of their seats

At Naperville Central High, teachers use "brain breaks" to combine exercise with learning.

Public education, a civil right

All those who care about civil rights, who care about human rights, should dedicate themselves to the cause of public education, Jon Meacham says.

Good chemistry in Maryland

Alison Stewart visited the University of Maryland Baltimore County to find out how that school is turning more college students into scientists.

Education roundtable

Alison Stewart leads a lively discussion with three education reformers about practical solutions that work.