There's a shortage of radiation detectors, yet they give that f*cker two different styles, unbelievable.

the reporters, journalists & camera men should give up their radiation detectors to the people who need them, I would.

@golden1101 There's a big difference between "detectors" and dosimeters. They should have bunches of dosimeters.

There is no safety equipment which will save them. There simply isn't. Nor is there really anything much they can do, they are being sacrificed to make it appear something is being done but they are only buying time, while the media tries to move on and the situation is presented as just an emergency which will eventually be under control. Basically they are assuming the public cannot handle the truth, but amazingly they don't seem to realise it will be impossible to cover up.

They can call it what they like but it remains neutron beams and if anyone doesn't understand the danger, look up neutron bomb. The scary thing is that this indicates things are very bad and getting worse, on schedule to a catastrophic meltdown in one and then all of the reactors.

It's amazing to me that the Japanese gov't can't afford to take care of the people handling this, little things like dosimeters and food can't be supplied? And the US, instead of sending tons of aid (cement, boron, experts, dosimeters, etc.) starts another war for oil. I had a lot more respect for Japan before watching their handling of this crisis.

In a decent world dick chenny would have been executed for his idea of using DU munitions and the power company COs would be the ones doing the clean up work at this failed plant in Japan.
